North American Rescue, LLC Announces Acquisition of Adaptive Thermal Solutions, Inc.

GREER, SC — August 16, 2010 — North American Rescue, LLC (NAR) announces the acquisition of Adaptive Thermal Solutions Inc, (ATSI), a privately held Research and Development and manufacturing firm headquartered in Windsor, Ontario, Canada.

ATSI has developed a portfolio of medical devices primarily focused on emergency response and Medevac hypothermia management. Research has proven the critical nature of hypothermia management in trauma situations as the management of body temperature has been revealed as one of the most important factors in survival and reduction in mortality rates in trauma cases. The suite of products developed by ATSI includes a variety of emergency related, portable, light weight, heated medical devices that can be used individually or as a complete suite. NAR plans to integrate ATSI's suite of Hypothermia Management Products into its comprehensive product portfolio.

“We are excited about this opportunity to combine the environmental control technology of ATSI with our life saving equipment,” said Samuel D. Wyman III, President of North American Rescue, LLC. “We look forward to providing the very best life saving innovations that decrease preventable death in Tactical Medicine and Rescue situations found on the modern battlefield, and believe that this acquisition positions us to rise to the ever-changing requirements that soldiers, tactical operators and healthcare providers are faced with.”

ATSI brings to NAR increased Research and Development personnel and an extensive Intellectual Property portfolio that will allow for ongoing development of other hypothermia management products.

About Adaptive Thermal Solutions, Inc.

Adaptive Thermal Solutions has been a technologically advanced Research and Development and manufacturing firm focused on providing environmental controls for the purpose of increased hypothermia management in Medevac situations. ATSI will be relocating to the Greenville area of SC in order to join with the Greer, SC NAR headquarters.
